Fobis Technologies Launches Weemote X TV Remote

Fobis Technologies is celebrating its 10 years of innovative Weemote TV Remotes with the launch of Weemote X Remote

MIAMI, FL – Aug 5, 2011 – Fobis Technologies, the Miami-based TV Remote specialist company, launched its latest and most advanced product Weemote X to mark its tenth anniversary. The company is promoting Weemote X as a high-tech device that takes high-tech and complexity out of watching TV.

The Weemote X is a simple TV remote control that makes TV viewing a peaceful and happy experience. Weemote's simple controls are ideally suited for kids, seniors and people with disabilities, dementia, Alzheimer's or autism. Weemote X combines features that suit both kids and seniors, and includes learning features that make programming a snap. It is a great kids remote that allows kids to switch to their favorite channels and use the device the way they like.

John Stephen, the president of Fobis Technologies, Inc. is excited about the launch of Weemote X. He says, "I know that I have invented a TV remote control that will simplify the lives of parents and caregivers. Children with autism and adults with Alzheimer's and so many other people will now be able to enjoy the TV experience without risking mangling the entire entertainment system."

The best part about Weemote X is its simple design, which includes just a few buttons. The parent or caregiver can program the buttons, making it easy for the user to surf pre-selected channels. A single button can turn on the entire entertainment system. Weemote X does not require additional remotes for the set top box or satellite. Normally priced at $34.95, Fobis is offering Weemote X a $10 discount for on-line orders through August 31, 2011.
